According to Vienna state that the early publication of a general amnesty in all the monarchies for the persons who were condemned or imprisoned, or who are in exile for participation in the events of 1848, is considered certain.

From this amnesty, it is added, the only exclusions will be the exiles who, in those latter times, have compromised themselves by publicly announcing their intention of getting up, at the first opportunity, revolution in any of the Austrian States.

Politics in France—Louis Napoleon and the Catholic Priests—Efforts to Unseat the Emperor—The War Spirit in Europe—Garibaldi's Fenestrelle Campaign—Tyrolean Austrian Decree—Important Military Preparations—Rumored Change in the French Ministry—An American Banquet in Paris, &c.

A dull calm has succeeded the tempest of political agitation that has so long swayed over—I should say aullen eaux; for under the apparent smooth surface a raging storm is gathering that will burst and scatter destruction on all sides, unless restrained by the good sense and perfect understanding of the most powerful nations of Europe—France and England. Superstition and priestly craft are at work to pull down a sovereign that is lending the aid of his great influence to civilization and progress, to peace and the advancement of nations to constitutional government. All over Europe the priests of Catholicism are working their under-handed machinations against Louis Napoleon. Through the length and breadth of his empire, his priestly enemies are conspiring against him and are, by manœuvres and lies, endeavoring to undermine the great hold he has upon his people. The temporal power of priesthood is waning. To preserve it from Pope Pius IX's followers are at present doing the utmost they dare attempt. Inidious whispers poison the minds of the lower classes, while deep wells and great promises are brought to bear against the higher. The priests are persuading the people to hear their voices, to oppose a passive resistance to the efforts of the government in the advancement of commercial relations; and in fact they seek, by alarming the fears of some and awakening the ambition and cupidity of others to counteract the wise measures of the Emperor. You know how much may be accomplished by the means the Catholic clergy have at its command. No one can deny or not be aware of the fact that at present Napoleon III is encountering great difficulties from his own subjects. Italy's Pope's agents are doing all they can to turn the scale of the best friend of Italian unity, and soon we shall hear of internal trouble in the new kingdom, as occasioned by the vile efforts and influence of the priests. In Austria the same influence acts upon Francis Joseph, while no one can doubt that it is alone that causes the determined and obstinate resistance of Francis II. In his strength he will remain fighting to the last, counting upon the promises of the priests, who are, as known, doing all they can to bring about a revolution as well as an interference in his favor, by some power. Working upon the fears, the jealousy, and the ambition of all, the priests hope to cause trouble and raise quarrels that may some way result in favor of priestly power and dominion. Let us hope that Napoleon III, who so determinedly stands out against the priests, may succeed. In fact, were England to join France at present, and enforce upon Austria the abandonment of, or rather, sale, of Venetia and the granting of real reforms to Hungary, while both Powers fully recognized the independence of the new Italian kingdom, all chance for the great cause, now so imminent, would end, and Napoleon III would soon agree in calming the agitation that reigns in France. If, on the contrary, England and France combined do not make of the great moral influence they certainly have, existing will see the commencement of a fearful struggle that will end, none can tell how. It is evident that Garibaldi will attack Venetia soon, and that if successful in so doing he will attack Rome. He would of course seek a foreign Hungary, and is disposed, so far as we know, to have him to aid even Pothi's victory. To what madness now, we wonder, would all this lead? How fearful would Europe seem to how great would be her exhaustion. Now, as this fearful prospect may be arrested if France and England combine to enforce peace—so let me assure you that the world may repeat after the tragic scenes of the past. The dream of a grand fleet that has alarmed the commercial classes in England is caused by the hearing up of stories being told to the masses. This fact may be attributed to the influence of the clergy, as the mass of the people are most easily influenced. The grand armament of ships in Venetia was at a short notice brought out a force of 300,000 men, while the continued piling up of materials for war in that province shows that Austria expects to be attacked. France Joseph is aware that the aggression must be stopped, and that the only way to do this is that all measures be taken to prepare for it. A new and most tyrannical decree has just been published by the Office of War of Vienna, ordering all fathers of families to recruit their sons from abroad, even if absent for their education.

In case of need, should have a force of about 300,000 men to defend the different possessions in Upper Italy and the Adriatic.

Antrax will not assume the offensive, but the experts to be attacked in the spring, and comprehend that the struggle will be terrible. The Italian army numbered and better organized than in 1848, and possessed of the entire resources of a powerful diocese on the side of Hungary. These circumstances will equalize the chances of war, and, by changing the scene of hostilities, will reduce the advantages conferred by the former.
